Jerry Greening is one of the oldest and most skillful hunters in Pennsylvia, and his adventures with wild cats, bears and dear are pretty well known in this part of the country. A few days ago, just before the cold snap, Jerry started out on a grand bear hunt, taking with him provisions for a two days' stay. The first day out he killed a fine four prouged buck, which he dressed and hung up in a tree out of the reach of wild animals. He built a fice a short distance from where he had hung the buck, and after eating a hearty supper rolled himself up in his blanket, with his feet to the fire, and was soon asleep. In the middle of the night he was awakened by a loud noise and turning over poiselessly on his side he discovered a large bear trying to pull the buck out of the tree. Jerry grabbed his rifl, and, after taking careful aim fired. The bear gave a loud growl and galloped off in the underbrush. In the morning Jerry saw blood stains on the ground, and after following the tracks some distance he came to the entrance to a cave in some rocks. In front of this cave was a large pool of blood, and the hunter was convicced that his game was within. He procuied a pine knot, out of which he mide a torch, and, after the manner of Israel Pur-nam, he catered the cave. The entrance was small and he was obliged to creep in on his hands and knees, but as he advanced the opening grew larger and larger until finally be could stand upon his feet. He was advancing cau tiously when he heard a terrific growl, and before he could draw his rifls the bear sprang the shoulder with her claws. The torch which Jerry carried was exploguished, and the old hunter was left to fight for his life in total dark. He succeeded in reaching his hunting knife and dean the bear several hard, vigorous blows in the neck and side with the weapon. The blood from the animal's would spurted in to Jerry's face, nearly blinding him. The bear released her bold and made for the mouth of the cave. Jerry followed, but in the darkness was unable to find his rifls. He pursued the bear, and just outside the cave another hand to hand conflict tock place. The strugglo lasted about haif an hour, and after the bear had succeeded in near y stripping Greening of all his clothing and had reflicted several more wounds she was despatched. Jerry got another pine knot and reentered the cave and procured his

The floor of the cave, Greening sava, was liverally covered with bones. - I hiladelphia Times, A RICH MAN'S WHIMS -Some few weeks ago a weil-to do burgess of Vienna died, leaving the whole of his property away from his natural beirs and to the son of a retired Aus trian general with whom he had been personally unacquainted during his life, upon the sole ground, duly set forth in his will, that the Christian name of the young gentleman in question was identical with his own. When the legatee, after proving the will, visited the testator's dwelling, accompanied by a legal official, in order to take possession of the property bequeathed to him, his attention was first directed to a fire-proof safe as a likely repository of securities. Upon opening the safe, however, it was found to contain nothing but scraps of paper, cut up very small with scissors, and consisting chiefly of old envelopes. A further search through the rooms, however, was rewarded by the discovery of bank notes to the amount of 40,000 floring, crumpled up into a ball and hidden in a corner behind a curtain. Over 20,000 florins were pre sently found in a a photographic altum, containing some two score portraits of pretty women in facey costumes. Behind each one of these photographs were concealed back notes corresponding to value to the deceased gentle man's appreciation of the ladies' respective charms, a fair beauty's attractive merrits being appraised a: 2 000 florios, while those of a handpiner brunette were rated at 3 000.

The notion of looking behind these potraits was suggested by marginal notes appended to each on the pages of the album in which they were inserted. These memoranda indicated the intention of the decrased to make his testimen tary dispositions in such sort that each several charmer should inherit the sum hinden away behind her counterfeit presentment. Fortunate y for his heir, this eccentric proj c: had never been advanced beyond its valuation stage, and thus the prizes originally intended to be awarded to beauty ultimately fell into the hands of an infantry lieutenant.
